

Curtiss Pope is a Developer, and Designer of Mobile retail software and experiences.

He started his technology career coding and designing web sites and software for companies like Yahoo, Microsoft and Installshield.

His current role is as Founder/CEO of AisleFinder, a GPS for Supermarkets.

AisleFinder was selected to be one of the startups selected for the first class of Microsoft BizSpark.

He often writes about his views on retail, entrepreneurship, design and motivation on blogs such as, SuperMarketNews, VentureBeat, Hacker News, Black Enterprise, and has been featured in sites such as: Food Network Magazine, Microsoft.com, USA Today, TechCrunch, ReadWriteWeb, VentureBeat, NPR, CNN.com, PC Magazine and CNET.

Curtiss was born and raised in Silicon Valley where he still resides.